

ENGINEER SMITH TALKS BUSINESS.

We Gets All the Money He Wants, and Might Have Got More by Asking.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment sent for Deputy Commissioner of Public Works D. Lowber Smith yesterday, and asked him to explain a request for the transfer of $12,000 from the appropriation for lighting to the appropriate for repairs and renewal of pipes and stop cocks. Mr. Smith came to the Mayor's office looking an spruce and trim as West Point cadet. The Board was disposed to question him, and he stood like a veteran. He rained down a volley of reasons why the appropriation should be made without delay. He said there were four gages of men constantly on hand to attend to any defects, leaks, or breaks in the pipes; that it is of the utmost importance that you should be on the alert at all times, lest fire break out in the pipes and damage should be done.

"If you do not make this appropriation," he said, "you will be compelled to go to me again. I wish it to be distinctly understood who is responsible for the consequences. We have not had a sufficient appropriation for the work, and we must have it before Oct. 1st. That is all I am talking about. There is no politics in this. I am thinking business, and only looking for the welfare of the city."

Commissioners Collyer do not understand how this is. We are paying more and more for water supply, and nothing is being done. South Lock sits an engineer and the cause is very plain. You have got all sorts of pipes, and the water is not being used. We are compelled to pay 30,000 gallons in laythorn fees, comprising water in pipes for 10 days a day, and have to catch up on Sunday, when the entire system is closed. The pipe is being repaired, the new aqueduct is now being utilized, so that a great tax on the water system, and you have no idea of the source of anxiety it is to those who have charge of the work."

Mr. Smith got his appropriation, and the Board expressed a sense of relief that he did not ask for more.

IS HE A NON-RESIDENT?

The Gibbs Committee wants to have As-sessor Livingston Indicted.

The Gibbs investigating committee started off yesterday afternoon by making things warm for Van Brugh Livingston, one of the new Board of Tax Assessors appointed by Mayor Grace. Mr. Livingston testified on Thursday that his residence was the New York Hotel, and had been when he was appointed. Mr. John H. Newman, enquirer of the hotel, testified yesterday that Mr. Livingston did not live in the hotel, and had not been there from April 17, 1883, to Oct. 8, 1885. At the latter date he passed one night there, and had there a few things in a closet, but paid no rent.

Chairman Gibbs said he would lay the case before Mayor Grace, as a non-resident he cannot be an assessor, and also submit it to the Grand Jury with a recommendation that Mr. Livingston be indicted for perjury.

Mr. Newman, of the Department of Charities and Correction testified that it would not increase expenses very largely the prisoners from the Fiscal and General Sessions, and the State Prison, and General (at a cost of some $20,000 a year according to Lawyer Strahan) should be handled by the Department of Charities and Correction, and not the police, who would be responsible for its care.

When the witness was asked if he had been turned into a hospital, he said he had not been there from April 17, 1883, to Oct. 8, 1885.

Two thousand dollars a day, and that an answer be served within the same time.

POUL ROOMS RAIDED.

A lot of them discovered all at once to be Doing a Bulk Business.

Superintendent Murray and Police Inspector Steers dropped in to see Police Justice Murray yesterday morning, and found that the police had made quite a nice haul and driven the prisoners to the Grand Jury with a recommendation that Mr. Livingston be indicted for perjury.

Mr. Newman, of the Department of Charities and Correction testified that it would not increase expenses very largely the prisoners from the Fiscal and General Sessions, and the State Prison, and General

(at a cost of some $20,000 a year according to Lawyer Strahan) should be handled by the Department of Charities and Correction, and not the police, who would be responsible for its care.

When the witness was asked if he had been turned into a hospital, he said he had not been there from April 17, 1883, to Oct. 8, 1885.

Two thousand dollars a day, and that an answer be served within the same time.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have no debts." The son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., told the press that his father had been a prisoner in the Tombs for two years, and that he could accommodate 200 men. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars would pay for the Tombs, and the property would be well worth the sum. The son said that the property, now covered by a deposit, belongs to the city, and would be a good place for the criminal trial, and could be connected with the Tomb by a bridge. The committee adjourned on Monday.

WHERE IS HIS PROPERTY?

Mr. Erwin Dies Without Telling His Family About His Business & Estate.

This advertisement appeared yesterday:

JOSEPH ERWIN died on Nov. 6. His personal belongings, which he had left to his wife, Mrs. Erwin, and his son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., were sold at auction yesterday.

"Mr. Erwin," said Lawyer Liverpool radar, "was a dry goods merchant in this city, but in 1872 he gave up his store, and had since been a salesman in several large dry goods firms. At the time of his death he was working both for Owan Jones' Sons, Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, and for Howard & Co., jewelers, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. He was a man of abstemious habits and strictly attentive to business, and was supposed to have accumulated a comfortable fortune. He had a son, Mr. Joseph Erwin, Jr., a child, to whom he left his business affairs." When questioned on the subject he invariably answered: "My property is ample, and I have